The No.11 (Fighter) Group Operations Room at RAF Uxbridge was responsible for planning and coordinating the air defence of London and the South East during the Second World War. As well as bearing the brunt of the Battle of Britain, the Operations Room was responsible for controlling fighter operations during the Dunkirk Evacuations and the Normandy Landings.

Known today as the "Battle of Britain Bunker", the Ops Room is shown exactly as it was on 15th September 1940, the day on which Winston Churchill visited and witnessed the conduct of the most significant day of the Battle of Britain.

Membership of the Friends will allow you to participate in the ongoing preservation of this unique historic building and its collection of artefacts, which so inspired our greatest Prime Minister and today allows visitors to continue to learn about the RAF during the Second World War and, in particular, the RAF's most famous operation: The Battle of Britain.
